Ingersoll as a Comforter.

Not long ago a lady of San Francisco was suddenly overwhelmed by a great. crushing affliction, that, coming like a thunderboldt upon her, for a time threatened her life. Her son, an only child, had gone on a short business journey, expecting soon to return. Sudden and fatal 1liness overtook him, and a brief telegram announced the dreadful tidings to his heart-broken mother. The terrors her creed, in which she had been brought up, and according to which, as she well knew, there was no hope of future happiness for the unconverted young man, added greatly to her agonizing grief over his death, un't! her friends feared that her reason, if not her life, would be destroyed. A lady friend, who had sympathized deeply with and vainly sought to console her, informed Colonel Ingersoll, and begged him, it possible, to write something which might at least relieve in a meas ure the terrible apprehen-ion as to the fate of her son under which she was suffering. The following is his letter. which, as will be seen by the subjoined grateful reply, was in good measure effective. It was only upon the representation that, like Colonel Ingersole's wide'y published remarks at the funeral of his brother in Washington some years ago, these words also might "com fort other hearts which mourn," that a San Francisco reporter succeeded in obtaining a copy for publication, with the condition that the name of the re-ceipient should not be mentioned:

My Dear Madam: Mrs C. has told me the sad story of your almost infinite

sorrow. I am not foolish enough to suppose that I can say or do anything to lessen your great grief, your anguish for his loss; but maybe I can say something to drive from your poor heart the fiend of fear-fear for him. If there is a God, let us believe that He is good, the good have nothing to fear I have been told that your sen was kind and generous; that he was filled with charity and sympathy. Now, we know that in this world ake begets like, kindness produces kindness, and all good bears the truit of joy; belief is nothing-deedare everything; and if your son was kind be will naturally find kindness wherever he may be. You would not inflict endless pain upon your worst enemy. Is God worse than you? You could not bear to see a viper suffer for ever. Is it possible that God will doom a kind and generous boy to evertasting pain? Nothing can be more monstrously PRACTICE is beyond the grave It nothing is known, then it is not honest for anyone to pretend that he does know. It noth ing is known, then we can hope only for ST. JOSEPH, MO. the good. If there be a God your boy is no more in His power now than he was before his death-no more than you are at this moment. Why should we fear God more after death than hefore? Does the feeling of God toward His children change the moment they die? While we are alive they say God us? True love never changes. I beg Eyes inserted. you to throw away ab fear. Take of you to throw away ab fear. Take counsel of your own heart is the best revelation of Him, and your heart could never send your boy to endiess pain.

After all, and the churches in the world know no more on this subject than the ants on the anthills. Creeds are good for nothing except to break the hearts of the loving. Let us take courage. Under the seven hued arch of hope let the dead sleep. I do not pretend to know, but I do know that others do not know. Listen to your DENTIST. heart, believe what it says, and wait with patience and without fear what the future has for all. If we can get no comfort from what people know, let us ayord being driven to despair by what they do not know. I wish I could say something that would put a star in your night of grief, a little flower in your lonely path-and if an unbeliever has uch a wish, surely an infinitely good

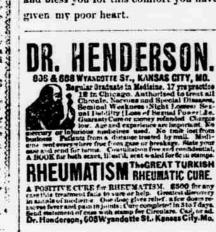

> The first peace I have known, real peace, since the terrible blow, has come to me now. While I will not doubt the existence of a God, I feel that I can rest my grief-stricken heart on His good ness and mercy; and you have helped me to do this. Why, you have helped me to believe in an all-merciful and loving Creator, who has gathered (I will try to believe) my poor little boymy kind, kind, large hearted childinto His tender and sheltering arms. There is a genuine ring in your words that lifts me up. Your belief, so clear and logical, so filled with common eense, corresponde, so far back as I can remember, with my own matter of-fact ideas; and I was the child of good and praying parents, and my great.wondering eyes, questioning silently when they talked to me, my strange ways, white I tried to be good, caused them often great anxiety and many a pang -God forgive me! I am writing, while people are talking all about me, just a line to think you, from the bottom of my heart for the comfert you have given me to-day. You great, good man, I see the traces of tears all over your letter, and I could clasp your hand and bless you for this comfort you have

The Smart Boy.

Charles Dudley Warner in Harper's Magazine: There were two bright little gurls off for a holiday with their western uncle, a big, good-natured man with a diamond breastpin, and his voluble son, a lad about the age of his little cousins, whom he constantly pestered by his rude and dominating behavior. The boy was a product which it is the despair of all a product which it is the despair of all if your Grocer does not keep there. Europe to produce, and our travelers send $1.25, and we will send Pall had great delight in him as an epitome of American "smartness."He led all the confident opinions about everything easily put down his deferential papa and pleased the other passengers by his selfsufficient knowing all air. To a boy who Kreek & Watson, J. B. Payne, Ira Peter had traveled in California and seen the Alps it was not to be expected that this humble mountain could afford much entertainment, and he did not attempt to conceal his contempt for it. When the stage reached the Rip Van Winkle house, half way, the shy school girls were for indulging a little sentiment over the old legend, but the boy, who concealed his ignorance of the Irving romance until his cous n had prattled the outlines of it, was not to be taken in by any such chaff, and though he was a little staggered by Rip's own cot tage and by the sight of the cave about it which is labeled as the very spot where the vagabond took his long nap, he attempted to bully the attendant and drink mixer in the lut, and open'y flaunted his incredulity until the bartender showed him a long bunch of Rip's hair, which hung like a scalp on a natl, and the rusty barrel and stock of the musket. The cabin is, indeed. full of old guns, pistols, looks of hair, buttons, cartridge-boxes, bullets,knives and other undoubted relics of Rip and the revolution.
